

Media Contact:
James McCafferty
360-548-8048

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

November 16, 2009

New Playground Finds Name!

The Rotary Adventure Playground at Freedom Park will be our community's newest attraction this Spring announced project coordinator Greg Gilday unveiling the playground's name. After a community-wide naming contest for the new community built playground to be built this Spring at Freedom Park ended in a draw last month the project worked with its lead sponsor to identify a name that identified common themes to synthesize a name that reflected the spirit of submitted names and the overall community.

"This playground will be far different than anything most of us have ever seen," explained Gilday, "From its size to the variety of play surfaces and age accessibility." The playground will have distinct play areas for younger and older children with appropriate equipment reflected the community and the designs submitted by area youth.

The new community built playground is created through donations of time, talent, materials and cash from every member of the Stanwood Camano Community. The project will break ground next Spring with an intensive build process for five days. "The build relies on having all of the necessary components and volunteers to make the magic of dreams become reality," said Gilday. An extensive list of components and opportunities for individuals and businesses is available on-line at www.iHeartParks.org.

The Stanwood Camano Community Playground is a community effort. Volunteers and donations are what will make this playground a reality for our children. Donations may be made to the Stanwood Camano Area Foundation on behalf of the project. More information is available at iHeartParks.org or by calling 360-629-2900.

###